Received circular from Bela VARGA which contained both the German text, as published in the "Salzburger Nachrichten," and a Hungarian translation. [ ] stated that similar circulars were sent to other well-placed Hungarian refugees in an attempt to get a "spontaneous" document under way to effect KIRKESCHTY's release from prison.

About one week after the KIRKESCHTY article appeared in the "Salzburger Nachrichten," [ ] invited Mrs. LITTMERHORN out for cocktails as a token of appreciation for her efforts. He took her to the Cafe Wettsteiner where, quite by accident, they met Doctor GABAVIL. During the course of the ensuing conversation, GABAVIL made several remarks which reflected his dis-satisfaction with the U. S. occupation forces and the detrimental effect of the Americans on the Austrian way of life. In defense of his adopted country, [ ] countered GABAVIL's remarks and, when the subject of refugee living conditions was broached, [ ] offered to take GABAVIL on a tour of Camp 1007 at Tols, Austria, which is a U. S. sponsored refugee camp. [ ] told Lowndes that the opportunity had not as yet arisen whereby [ ] could make good his offer; either [ ] or GABAVIL had been forced to postpone the proposed visit on different occasions.

In subsequent correspondence received from Bela VARGA, [ ] was asked to continue efforts to keep the Austrian press continually aware of KIRKESCHTY's plight and to try to get more articles printed which would call the KIRKESCHTY case to the public's attention. [ ] got things rolling by writing to his correspondents (Joseph TAVANI, Argen; Bela LITTMERHORN; Josef KIRKESCHTY, Elegentorf; Pal KALMER, Vols), and requesting them to contact local Hungarian refugee Catholic priests in an effort to get the letter to offer special status for KIRKESCHTY on 26 December 1953, the anniversary of his arrest. The correspondents complied and sent both reports and photographs of the occasion to [ ], who forwarded everything to Bela VARGA. On 1 February 1954 [ ] again asked Mrs. LITTMERHORN to publish an article on KIRKESCHTY; on the previous occasion [ ] furnished LITTMERHORN with a polished article in the German language (again a BAROCZY production). [ ] told Lowndes that this second article, which is attached, is not the same one which [ ] submitted. Some member of the newspaper's staff undoubtedly re-wrote BAROCZY's article.

Carey officer noted. Reference is made to "BAROCZY's article" as there is little doubt but that [ ] merely provided the former with a general theme which BAROCZY built into a finished product. [ ] rather hesitatingly admitted that nobody other than Lowndes knew that BAROCZY was the actual author of both articles. [ ] claim that he wrote the article and asked BAROCZY only to put [ ] in good polished German as believed to be an attempt on the part of the former to keep from losing face with Lowndes.

[ ] At the close of his 1 February 1954 meeting with Mrs. LITTMERHORN, arranged to get together with both LITTMERHORN and GABAVIL in the near future.
